Short title

3. This Act shall be called the Telecommunications Amendment Act, 1997. 10

MEMORANDUM ON THE OBJECTS OF THE TELECOMMUNICATIONS AMENDMENT BILL

The main object of the Telecommunications Amendment Bill (the Bill) is to provide for the selection of officers and employees within the Department of Communications performing regulatory functions and their transfer to the South African Telecommunications Regulatory Authority (SATRA). The transfer to SATRA of functions of a regulatory nature cannot be arranged without identifying experienced staff for transfer to SATRA to continue to perform these functions. An amendment of section 17 of the Telecommunications Act to cater for such a transfer of staff is required.

The skills to perform these highly technical and other functions have been accumulated over many years and are not freely available on the open market. In order to ensure a smooth transition and not to jeopardise the provision of services to the radio and telecommunication sectors it is absolutely essential that the transfer of functions be carried out in such a way as to ensure that the service levels are not negatively affected. The complexity of the regulatory functions can be judged by the fact that there are 946 000 licensed radio stations (excluding broadcasting) in South Africa which includes 90 000 radio licences which must be maintained and managed.

Under these circumstances the selection and transfer to SATRA of specific members of staff of the Department performing regulatory functions is unavoidable. The existing provisions of the Telecommunications Act do not cater for such a transfer of staff.

The Bill seeks to enable SATRA and the Director-General of the Department of Communications to identify, select and negotiate on the transfer of staff of the Department to SATRA and thereafter to effect the agreed transfer by notifying the staff involved. The Bill also provides for personnel so transferred to retain existing salaries, pension, vacation, sick leave and other benefits. Provision is also made for an appeal to the Minister.

The Bill also seeks to apply the amendments mentioned above, with the necessary changes, to staff transferred from the Department to the Universal Service Agency.

The Department and the State Law Advisers are of the view that the Bill falls to be dealt with in accordance with the procedure established by section 75 of the Constitution.
