MEMORANDUM ON THE OBJECTS OF THE POSTAL SERVICES BILL, 1998

Existing legislation regarding postal services was formulated over the past century. This Bill is part of the legislative reform aimed at restructuring and reorganisation of the postal sector. The Postal Services Bill responds to the general policy directives outlined in the White Paper on Postal Policy. The White Paper arises primarily from lessons gained from work over a period of three years, which included an extensive process of public consultation.

A Technical Task Team was appointed in September 1996 to formulate the Postal Policy framework. This resulted in the drafting of a discussion document. A consultative conference was held in Midrand from 21 to 23 November 1996.

The Post Office is active in the communications and distribution market, the retail market and the financial services market. Competition is considered healthy for the development of the sector and the economy, and is to be encouraged subject to the meeting of the requirements of universal service obligations and related regulations. In order to ensure universal service, a set of reserved services has been established, in which the universal service provider receives a degree of monopoly protection. The monopoly service includes all letter mail, the issuing of stamps and roadside letterbox collection. All other services, including parcel and express services, and any future services differing from those defined as reserved, are categorised as non-reserved and are subject to competition and market forces.

The intention of the Bill is to give effect to the legislative principles contained in the White Paper. It seeks to establish an orderly regulatory environment for postal services, to monitor and regulate tariff structures, the provision of universal services and other licence conditions, quality, research, standards and enforcement.

For this purpose the Bill provides for the establishment of a Postal Regulator with its support staff as a Directorate within the Department of Communications. It also provides for the licensing and for the protection of the monopoly of the postal company for such period of time as may be necessary. The White Paper on Postal Policy provides for the monopoly to be reviewed after three years. Operators operating postal services outside of the monopoly and providing services in the unreserved postal services area, including couriers, will be required to register with the Postal Regulator.

A decisive programme for Black Economic Empowerment is to be initiated. The development of human resource capacity is considered an essential component of the postal policy.

The rapid advances made in technology provide both a threat and opportunity to the postal sector. New technology will be incorporated into the Post Office, facilitating the improvement and expansion of service and quality of service offered.

The Bill furthermore provides for a large number of existing sections in the Post Office Act, 1958, relating to the postal company and its operations to be repealed, and where appropriate, to be incorporated in the Postal Services Bill, 1998.

The Postbank provides a unique opportunity to provide savings and banking services to rural communities. The Postbank will be restructured in terms of the White Paper towards an autonomous company owned by the postal company and Government. Proposals regarding the legal framework for the Postbank as the bank of first choice for the lower income group are underway. The Postbank will be used to encourage a culture of saving amongst its target clientele.

Crime can be committed both through and within the postal system. Thus the enforcement provisions in the Bill encompass postal crimes and offences as well as general crimes.

PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE

The Department of Communications and the State Law Advisers are of the opinion that this Bill must be dealt with in accordance with the procedure established by section 75 of the Constitution.
