MEMORANDUM ON THE OBJECTS OF THE REGULATION OF FOREIGN MILITARY ASSISTANCE BILL, 1997

1. In May 1996 the Constitution adopted certain principles for governing national security in the Republic. One of these principles pronounces the resolve to live in peace and harmony, which would preclude any South African citizen from participating in armed conflict, nationally or internationally, except as provided for in terms of the Constitution or national legislation.

2. Furthermore, although the Constitution recognises freedom of movement and occupation, these rights are not absolute and may be regulated by law. The Constitution also contains a prohibition on mercenary activities, unless specifically permitted by legislation.

3. The Bill therefore is intended to give effect to the constitutional provisions by regulating the provision of military assistance by individuals or juristic persons. The Bill expands the present functions of the National Conventional Arms Control Committee by including the regulation of all forms of military-related assistance abroad by South African individuals or juristic persons by the imposition of strict control measures to give effect to the Government's stated policies and the Constitution's requirements.

4. "Foreign military assistance" is defined in section 1. It includes engaging in armed conflict or providing military advice, training or cooperation, various forms of support, recruitment, medical or paramedical services, procurement of equipment and also providing security services for individuals or in respect of property. The Bill empowers South African courts to adjudicate upon any such acts committed outside the country. The Bill will apply not only to citizens of the Republic, but also to persons permanently resident therein and to all juristic persons registered or incorporated in the country.

5. Sections 3 and 4 describe the procedure to be followed for obtaining authorisation for foreign military assistance. Individuals or juristic persons who wish to provide military-related services abroad will in future be obliged, firstly, to obtain approval from the Government to market these services and, secondly, to receive authorisation to enter into a contract with a third party to provide such services. These steps are broadly in line with the present two-stage control system used by the National Conventional Arms Control Committee in respect of arms transfers. The Minister of Defence, acting on the recommendations of the Committee, has been empowered by the Government to decide on such authorisation.

6. Section 6 details the criteria which determine when authorisation may not be granted, while offences and penalties are mentioned in section 7. A contravention of the provisions can result in the imposition of a penalty not exceeding one million rand or imprisonment for a period not exceeding ten years, or both.

7. South African citizens who wish to provide any form of foreign military assistance will in future encounter the same comprehensive regulatory procedures and rigorous control measures that arms transfers are subjected to.

8. In the opinion of the State Law Advisers and the Department the Bill should be dealt with in accordance with section 75 of the Constitution.
